Peaceful Land

Many Native Americans were surprised when foreigners began to arrive in North America. The Native Americans believed that the land belonged to everyone, so they were confused when strangers from France, Spain, and England began to buy and sell the land. The land was important to the Native American way of life, so they respected it.

Look at this picture. Sophie, Felix, and a Native American are looking at the prairie night sky. What do you think they see in the stars?
